The future of action learning is virtual

Is virtual action learning more or less effective than working face-to-face? It's neither... It's different! It isn't a conference call or a webinar. For truly effective virtual working, participants must be mindfully present. The practice demands meticulous set-up and contracting, experienced facilitation and technology that supports their purpose.

Working virtually offers competitive advantages. It saves on travel time and cost; and, vitally, it reduces carbon footprint.

Virtual action learning creates intimate and profound reflective spaces, opening access to international perspectives, fresh ideas and new collaborations. The skills nurtured in the virtual space – especially the intense quality of listening and learning to make a deep connection in the digital space – are transferable to all areas of work... and life!
